1 BEFORE BEGINNING A PROJECT

Before starting the creation process of a project, it's crucial to question certain elements in order to analyze the context in which the project will take place.

Those questions, to a certain extent, will become the guidelines of the project; you will have to answer them throughout the creation and implementation of your project.
What's the context in which you will create and realize your project?
- Who wants to create the project?
- What type of project?
- What needs or problems does the project resolve?
- Who is this project for?
- What are the expectations for the project and what repercussions will it have on those involved in the project?
- What role are you playing?

To help you better understand every step involved, here is a fictional example of a project. You can find all the examples for each step in the document entitled "Fictional Project: Living Your Heritage."

This document is a tool to help guide you. Don't be scared to be creative!
